FOLLOWING HIS FOOTSTEPS

It's interesting to note how many sons or daughters follow their parent's political allegiances in Ireland. Not to mention those who take up the same profession as their father or mother. Is it instinctive, genetic or just chance? It's funny how the same dynamic doesn't seem to apply in the case of faith. Some of our children will practice, others will not. There are many saints born of atheists and many atheists born of saints. Yes, you have better housing, almost full employment, lower taxes, SSIA lolly, a vastly wider variety of food, the rising tide of prosperity having raised all boats.

Still the problem is not that the world isn't spiritually hungry, it's that the church has a tremendous lack of sold-out, unselfish Christians, committed to being a disciple for others. While people can be very willing to help out in practical parish projects, if you really want to get the back up of parishioners, all the Priest has to do is to suggest anything that involves sharing their faith. The response can be in marked contrast to the Gospels' 72, more on the lines of; 'Who am I to tell my neighbour what to believe?' Not so? Well, just think on this; what we are afraid to do is a clear indicator of the next thing you need to do. What do you need to act upon?
