The Creed

I Believe....

The Creed we usually say at Mass is called the Nicene Creed, though the shorter Apostle's Creed is also included in the Missal. This Nicene Creed was drawn up by a council held in Nicea in the fourth century. In the new edition of the Missal people will notice many changes to this prayer. The new translation aims to reflect the original Latin text more faithfully. As the prayer that professes our faith and that is professed by Catholics each Sunday across the world, it is important that we say the same words. Here we note some of the changes. I believe is a literal translation of the Latin credo. In the English translation, unlike the Latin, this phrase is repeated three times in the course of the prayer to help the flow of the text. While the Creed professes the faith of the entire Church the use of "I" in this prayer invites us to join our personal faith with that of other believers. Consubstantial with the Father is an example of a re-introduction of the theological term that may be unfamiliar to many people. What does it mean? At Nicea when they talked about the relationship between the Father and the Son they used the Greek Term homoousios to describe the unique nature of Jesus. The term expresses our belief that the Son is of the same essential Being and substance as the Father. The Latin term is consubstantialis - hence the use of consubstantial in the new translation. By the Holy Spirit was incarnate again reintroduced a time-honoured word that may be unfamiliar to many today. The birth of Jesus has a significance beyond that of any other human birth. The Word became flesh in the womb of Mary, the Son of God was incarnate, assumed human nature.

The new responses which are being used at Mass are available on cards in our Churches. We ask you to please leave the cards on your seats after Mass.

BAPTISM: We welcome into God's Family and the Christian Community Caoimhe Faith Cleary who was baptised in Coore Church last weekend & Orla Ita Joan Donnellan who was baptised in Quilty Church last weekend.
